

Anthony Innes became one of the first HSE apprentices in the country when he joined A&P Tyne last October.

A former supermarket worker, Anthony is a prime example of someone who is grasping all the opportunities that are available to him through an apprenticeship with A&P Group.

Across our three sites in Falmouth and on the Tyne and Tees, we are proud to offer 20 apprenticeships a year across a range of trades.

Anthony appreciates the benefits and opportunities of training with A&P. "By doing an apprenticeship here at A&P I get experience in shipbuilding and repair as well as fabrication environments," he said. "I get to see real working practices - all while I'm learning and qualifying as a safety officer.

"I enjoy being involved with the shipbuilding and repair industry and seeing how the different processes work in real life. I get to meet people from around the world who work in the industry.

"I would definitely encourage anyone to follow an apprenticeship as there are a lot of benefits such as earning while you're learning, gaining experience and qualifications, meeting new people and establishing yourself within the company."
